Social dreamers have long understood that building a more harmonious society depends on undermining structures that persist in viewing the family as a private economic unit where men provide resources for their OWN wives and children to the exclusion of others